In general: The inner product of any singular vector by itself is zero, and this suffices to characterize a singular vector. Hence  $rr$  reduces to  $r-r = 2xy p-q$ . Before proceeding further with the definition of the inner product, we may observe that the signs of  $x$  and  $y$  are determined by that one of the four angles (made by the fixed lines) in which  $r$  lies. According, then, as  $x$  and  $y$  have the same sign or different signs, the vector  $r$  belongs to one or the other of the classes (7) or (8), and the product  $r-r$  will have one sign or the other. These considerations suffice to show that if  $r$  and  $r$  are two vectors, and if  $r-r$  and  $r -r$  have the same sign, the vectors are of the same class, but if  $r-r$  and  $r -r$  are of opposite sign,  $r$  and  $r$  are of different classes. We have here a marked departure from Euclidean geometry, in which the inner product of a real vector by itself is always positive. We are now in a position to complete the definition of the inner product by stating that the product is a scalar, and that the product of a vector by itself is equal to the square of the interval of the vector, taken positively if the vector is of class (7), negatively if of class (5). This...
